WHAT ONLY POETRY CAN DO

Mezzo Soprano & Piano
Text by Barbara Crooker

What Only Poetry Can Do sets four texts about writing by poets Barbara Crooker and Julie Kane.
This piece was premiered by soprano Yayra Sanchez, soprano & Dale Trumbore, piano at the 2016 unSUNG Festival in Glendale, CA.

1. WHY WRITE?

Because I'm here, this late in the century, looking at the ink-filled sky, seeing the April comet, a luminous exclamation, not believing, with the alternatives of nuclear char or unchecked epidemic, that anything from our time will last.
But still, I was here, on this rock, this shale hillside, violets blooming in the grass, for a short time. I suffered, I lived, I loved in the face of everything, and I have to write it down.

Barbara Crooker

2. USED BOOK

What luck an open bookstore up ahead as rain lashed awnings over Royal Street, and then to find the books were secondhand, with one whole wall assigned to poetry;
and then, as if that wasn't luck enough, to find, between Jarrell and Weldon Kees, the blue-on-cream, familiar backbone of my chapbook, out of print since '83 its cover very slightly coffee-stained, but aging (all in all) no worse than flesh through all those cycles of the seasons since its publication by a London press.
Then, out of luck, I read the name inside:
The man I thought would love me till I died.

Julie Kane

3. REJECTION SLIP

forefinger sliced open
by rejection slip:
the cruelest cut of all

4. WHAT ONLY POETRY CAN DO

Make us stop, in our harried multi-tasking modern (or post-modern) lives, away from the ambient light
of electricity and all that follows, and look up, into the great glass eye of night, gazing in dumb struck wonder at the coded messages of the stars.
