ADVENT

with the women, waiting,
gathering branches
of green pine
in the dead of the year,
making rings of fire
in wax and wood,
completing the circle
with calls and cards,
wreathing the children
in cinnamon and chocolate,
stringing berries and corn,
stringing memories,
quilting them tightly,
in winter,
with the days of grey
and iron nights.

Barbara Crooker

Though Barbara Crooker describes a modern Christmas, there is a timeless, even ancient sense of ritual in the way she depicts the season of Advent: “gathering branches / of green pine... / making rings of fire / in wax and wood.” The memory of Christmases past can be bittersweet, too, and Crooker alludes to this in the darkness that winter brings: “days of grey / and iron nights.”

Ultimately, though, memories offer us a link to the past as well as a comfort that can be felt even in the darkest nights of winter. Christmas carols, I think, do exactly the same thing.
